

Knit one, purl one, puff one

Posted on Dec 01, Posted by Lois Lowry Category Uncategorized

Recently I had a note from the daughter of an old friend. Her mother had been my college roommate and a bridesmaid at my wedding a zillion years ago but we had not been in touch for a long time. Her daughter wrote to tell me of her death. Sadly, I have reached the age where I get this kind of note too often.

At any rate, her daughter said that her father...who had also been a college classmate of mine...recalled that I never took notes in class. My hands, instead, were busy with knitting.

Arrrggghh. Busted. He was accurate. I was a good student and seemed to get all the information I needed from reading and listening rather than note-taking. And it is true that in those days, most of the females in any given classroom were busy with knitting. Why? To please our boyfriends....if indeed they were pleased with all those homemade argyle socks.

Copyright © 2013 Lois Lowry. All rights reserved. This is a sample of the text that is obscured by a watermark in the original image.

The Marlboro brand is a symbol of quality and reliability, and it's no wonder that it's one of the most popular brands in the world. The brand's success is a testament to its commitment to excellence and its ability to adapt to changing market conditions. The brand's iconic red and white color scheme is a key element of its identity, and it's a symbol of the brand's commitment to quality and reliability. The brand's success is a testament to its commitment to excellence and its ability to adapt to changing market conditions.