

knit one, purr two

Posted on Feb 05, Posted by Lois Lowry Category Uncategorized

Today, once again, we in Maine are snowbound. 10 inches, they predict. But this time I have no plane to catch...only a theater ticket for tonight, and the play will probably be re-scheduled. So I am cozily at home, with a fridge full of food; and I decided to use this unexpected time to deal with a neglected project.

No, not a book manuscript, though that is also on the agenda.

This is: knitting. I used to knit a lot. Then I got a kitten and knitting became a lost cause. You simply can't knit with a kitten in the house. So I tucked it all away, and when I moved last spring, I moved several tote bags filled with yarn, knitting paraphernalia, and some half-done projects. I put them in a closet in my new house. And there they have sat until today, when I decided to sort through them and organize them and re-identify myself as a knitter.

There were a lot of quandries...one third of a baby blanket? Half a hat? Part of a mitten? quandries. Most of those things got tossed out.

And then there were things like this:

But what about things that start at $$$ and end at $$$? Maybe you will take expensive again do I want to

Text that is completely illegible and appears to be a scanning artifact or a very low-quality OCR of a caption.

Oh dear. Meow.
Tags: Untagged